Benefactor, Alberta government provide $3M for Ukrainian historical research

Peter Jacyk is a benefactor. Like most members of that increasingly important lodge, he moves quietly behind the scenes, determining who's doing what and how well and whether the work rates the support of the Peter Jacyk Educational Foundation. As he liked what he saw at the University of Toronto and Harvard University, so too does he like what the Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies (CIUS) at the University of Alberta is doing. With a signature, Jacyk has intensified Ukrainian historical research. The Toronto businessman's donation of $1 million and the Government of Alberta's matching of his donation on a two-to-one basis resulted in the creation of a research centre and the appointment of a leading scholar to direct that centre.

The Peter Jacyk Centre for Ukrainian Historical Research was officially opened on 11 August. At the same time, Frank Sysyn was introduced as the Centre's first head. Formerly an associate professor of history at Harvard University and the holder of a Humboldt Fellowship, Dr Sysyn has been given a five-year contract and carte blanche. (He will consult with an advisory committee but for all intents and purposes, he will set policy and choose projects.) The major projects, he pointed out to a gathering in Athabasca Hall, are the translation into English of the 10-volume 8,000-page history of the Ukraine by Mykhailo Hrushevsky and the writing and publication of a modern history of Ukraine that would bring to Ukrainian history those sources which have been unavailable. Hrushevsky, who died under mysterious circumstances in 1934, is a central figure in modern Ukrainian history.

The main challenge, Dr Sysyn told President Paul Davenport (recognition of Jacyk was his first official function), Bohdan Krawchenko, Director of CIUS, and Hal Spelliscy, Executive Director of the Development Office, is to hire competent people to work on the translation, people who appreciate the need to adhere to accuracy while imparting a certain fluidity to the text.

The first volume should be published in 1992, and the 10th by the end of the decade, Dr Sysyn says.

It's not certain yet who the publisher will be.

Dr Sysyn has been to the Soviet Union and, like all Western scholars and, to a slightly lesser degree, their Soviet counterparts, he has had his troubles because of the archives being controlled by the KGB. The tightening has been reduced in the past two or three years, he says, obviously enthused about prospects for the Centre.

Dr Krawchenko said Jacyk is extremely knowledgeable. "He seems to know everyone in the field . . . who works and who doesn't. He's passionately committed to the advancement of Ukrainian scholarship."

Jacyk, who was born in Western Ukraine, emigrated to Canada in 1949. He said the University of Alberta has a good reputation in his circles. "I like to make money, but without you people I don't have a chance to buy something good for my money." □

Bentley still fighting to save prime agricultural lands

Building on prime agricultural land is a short-sighted practice that must be curtailed, says a well-known soil scientist and former Dean of the Faculty of Agriculture and Forestry.

Renewing his calls for a "land use court system," Fred Bentley told Folio that such a system would help take the pressure off local politicians who often find it extremely difficult to turn down requests that end up converting good agricultural lands into non-agricultural uses.

"The people down in Stettler are objecting to the nibbling away of good agricultural lands," he says, referring to Premier Don Getty's recent application to build a home on such lands. In many cases, the developer, buyer, owner and local government may all be in favor of such subdivisions of land, but such a conversion of hitherto productive agricultural lands is short-sighted, Bentley says.

The recent recipient of the Soil and Water Conservation Society's highest award, the Hugh Hammond Bennett Award, says his proposed court system would give proponents and opponents each a chance to present their arguments before an impartial body, made up of non-political appointees. Such a system, he explains, would be similar to the existing law courts, which have to abide by legislation enacted by elected officials.

"First of all, we have a basic misconception in this country, since we're now essentially an urban country, that Canada has great quantities of undeveloped land well-suited to agriculture," he says. "Canada has, for all practical

Bulk of repairs to Lister Hall to be done by end of August

The extent of the problems at the Lister Hall residences is not as severe as had been anticipated, Director of Housing and Food Services David Bruch says.

"We're quite pleased with how the work has proceeded and by the end of August the bulk of the work will be completed," he said 9 August.

Work on two support columns at Lister Hall began in June and, based on those findings, work then began 1 July on the other corroded support columns.

Efforts have been concentrated on repairing the cracked support columns; the reinforcing rebar in the columns has been coated to prevent further corrosion. The spandrels have also suffered damage by water penetration and hairline cracks have developed. Bruch said in some more severe cases as much as 20 percent of the rebar has been corroded.

"The problem is less severe as you move up the building, so that's good news. If this wasn't done, we were looking at one to three years before some major decisions would have had to be made."

A fall 1988 study of the five highrise residences, three at Lister Hall and two at Michener Park, revealed major structural and fire safety problems. Earlier this summer, the Board of Governors approved the spending of $2.5 million to stabilize the buildings for a three- to five-year period.

Scaffolding surrounds the Lister Hall residences, where repairs are under way on support columns.

St Joseph's College instrumental in creation of Centre for Ethics

A Catholic centre for ethics in health care, a first for Alberta, has been established in Edmonton.

St Joseph's College Centre for Ethics in Health Care and Biology will begin operations 1 September.

The Centre will be located in the Physicians and Surgeons Building at 8409 112 Street. It (the Centre) is intended to be both academic and practical, and will provide a facility for teaching, consultation, study and research in the area of ethics in health care and biology.

At the outset, the Centre will provide a reading room and research materials for persons interested in questions of ethics in health care. Full consultative services will be provided when the director takes office 1 July 1990.

St Joseph's College's Board of Governors, the Alberta Catholic Hospitals Foundation, the Misericordia Hospital and the Grey Nuns constitute the guiding force behind the Centre. The organizing committee has established a working relationship with the Joint Faculties Bioethics Project which is sponsored by the University of Alberta, University of Alberta Hospitals and the Medical Research Council (Canada).

A director for the Centre is expected to be named early in 1990. In the interim, a secretariat will be appointed effective 1 September. □

The second phase of the work, fire safety upgrades, will proceed in the fall, Bruch said. In the meantime, a number of fire safety upgrades are being carried out at Vanier House. One of that building's fire exits does not meet fire code specifications, Bruch explained.

Other problems have yet to be tackled. The Lister Hall highrises are 26 years old and the heating, ventilating and plumbing systems have all outlived their life expectancy, Bruch said. It has been estimated that it will cost $30 million just to do the necessary repairs on the three Lister Hall highrises and Lister Hall itself, he said.

This summer's work has been coordinated in such a way as to minimize the impact on student residents and conference participants, Bruch said. A few conference guests have complained and staff members have had to put up with the noise, but Bruch is hopeful there will be very little disturbance for students during the school year.

Housing and Food Services is working closely with Planning and Development, the upgrading project's managers.

Meanwhile, Alberta Advanced Education has struck a committee to look into the existing student residence policy.

Advanced Education Communications Officer Jane Simmons says the policy states that institutions are responsible for the maintenance and operation of the residences. The committee, made up of representatives from every public postsecondary institution in the province, is now setting terms of reference for the study.

She said the study will likely be completed by next spring. □

Rare Brueghel painting given to University

A rare painting by Pieter Brueghel the Younger was unveiled 16 August in the Bruce Peel Special Collections Library, Rutherford South.

The painting, "Peasant Wedding Dance in an Interior," was given to the Library by Lucie Javitch of Montreal, who died last September. The gift is in honor of her husband, Gregory Javitch (1898-1980), whose extensive collection of North and South American Indian materials is one of the Peel Library's most important collections.

The Javitch Collection, developed over 20 years, was one of the finest collections in private hands in Canada. The collection is now housed in the Peel Library's Javitch Room, along with the Brueghel painting, a favorite of Mr Javitch's.

Both of the collector's sons, Daniel of New York City, and Ronald of Montreal, were present for the unveiling ceremony.

The painting is one of only three in Canada attributed to Brueghel the Younger (1564/65-1637/8), who made a career as a painter producing numerous versions of his father's genre paintings.

Brueghel the Elder's original version of this painting is lost. As a result of the unavailability of many of the Elder's paintings, Brueghel the Younger's paintings have become extraordinarily popular.

In briefly reviewing his father's life, Daniel Javitch said his father had a strong intuitive sense that the U of A would take good care of the book collection. "He hoped the books would be used for scholarly purposes and he felt the subject of North American Indians would become very important to Americans.

"He believed that Eurocentric institutions would change and it was his hope that universities—and this one in particular—would be aware of the importance of the topic," Javitch said. □

Conference allows Canada and Korea to get down to cases

Canadian and Korean academics and public officials are making their way here to take as long a look at the 1990s as is possible during a two-and-a-half-day conference.

Formal papers—papers that are likely to trigger questions and discussions—will be delivered on 28 and 29 August; the morning of 30 August will be given over to an open round table for participants to talk about general issues of mutual interest.

All sessions will take place in 409 Business Building.

The theme of the conference is "Korea and Canada: Challenges for the 1990s." Papers will be presented on sociocultural mobility in Canada and Korea, international and domestic relations, intellectual property issues, Canada-Korea economic relations, education and technological policy, and resource and energy matters.

Korea will be represented by people from King Sejong University, the Korean Educational Development Institute, Yonsei University, and Sangmyung University. Canadian participants come from Brock University, the Government of Alberta and the University of Alberta.

His Excellency Soo Gil Park, South Korean Ambassador to

Canada, and Doug Roche, former Canadian Ambassador for Disarmament, will speak at the conference.

The conference is organized jointly by the Canadian Studies Program of the Institute of East and West Studies at Yonsei University and the University of Alberta. The location of the conference alternates between the two countries.

The first two Canada-Korea conferences bore the themes "Canada and Korea in Emerging Asia-Pacific Community" and "Korea and Canada: Relations with Major Powers." The purpose of the third conference is to build upon the foundations of the previous conferences by expanding the spectrum of issues that the two nations face with respect to their geopolitical, cultural and economic situations.

The registration fee of $45 includes a reception, banquet and lunches. Registration is being handled by Alberta International, 492-2958. □ purposes, no land of even fair suitability for agriculture that is undeveloped."

Dr Bentley is particularly critical of the recent Alberta Government report Agricultural Land Base Study: Development Opportunities for the Future. He contends it fosters the belief that vast amounts of land in the province can be economically converted for agricultural purposes.

The report, prepared by five provincial government departments, asserts that an expansion of the agricultural land base by more than 22 million acres and an intensification of production on close to 11 million acres could increase agricultural production by $2.5 billion annually.

Dr Bentley also finds fault with the report's willingness to consider land use conversion as a potentially viable means of increasing agricultural production in the province. The report states that woodland conversion would result in a $3.4 billion increase in the economy; prairie range conversion would result in a $520 million increase, and green area conversion would result in a $1.9 billion reduction.

"The ridiculous thing about this is that in the existing areas where farmers are trying to produce agricultural crops on peatland, they are encountering all kinds of problems," he says, citing wind erosion as one example.

Those areas in northwestern Alberta comparable to lands potentially convertible to agricultural uses "have yields in the order of 60 to 75 percent of what they are in central Alberta, yet in all cases costs of production are higher," Dr Bentley argues.

He maintains that rather than continuing to adhere to a "pioneering attitude," more attention should be paid to the wise use of existing agricultural lands. "In 1986, for example, $8 billion was spent on agricultural subsidies, and yet almost none of that money was spent on inducements or requirements to improve existing soil practices."

Dr Bentley, a Professor Emeritus of Soil Science and director of McAllister Environmental Services Ltd, says the government should be encouraging greater use of lime and the practice of crop rotation to reduce farmers' dependence on farm chemicals for nitrogen. □

Set designers turn Law Centre into backdrop for 'Small Sacrifices'

"Okay, quiet on the set, please. Annnnnnd, rolling!"

Farrah Fawcett strides through the Law Centre doors. Like a pack of wolves pursuing a wounded animal, the press mobs her.

"No comment!" her lawyer insists, as the pack of reporters and photographers unmercifully barges her with questions.

Finally, succumbing to the pack, she explains how her privacy was invaded by the police and how they are attempting to force her to confess to a murder she asserts she did not commit. Then, in an instant, the scrum is over and, presumably, the car is away.

"Okay, cut. That was good, very good," says "Small Sacrifices" director David Green. After several takes, he's satisfied that the scene is useable.

It's a typical day on the production set, which consists of various locations around

The crew sets up for another take.

Edmonton, including the Law Centre, which, for two days (15 and 16 August), was transformed into an Oregon court building.

But why the Law Centre? Location manager Pat O'Connor says the building works in a lot of respects, in terms of its architecture, small town flavor and resemblance to a typical American court building. And, he says, the fact that classes are out was also convenient.

The film, based on a true story about a woman from Eugene, Oregon, who attempted to murder her children and cover up the crime by shooting herself and claiming they had been attacked, will be shown on the ABC Television Network in November as a mini-series.

The film is being produced by Fries Entertainment, a Los Angeles-based company, in conjunction with Allarcom Studios, an Edmonton-based company.

O'Connor, who received a geology degree from the University of Alberta in 1977, says that besides the $1,500 daily fee the University receives for the use of the facilities, the city and province generally receive the benefits of roughly 60 percent of the $8 million budget.

"The Government of Alberta has made it clear they want to develop alternative industries, given that the oil industry is so fickle," says O'Connor. "So they provide a lot of buildings for us," he says, noting the government's desire to develop a film industry in the province. □

Louis encourages native students

There were more than 15,000 native students in Canada enrolled in postsecondary education last year, "yet that's still far below the minimum numbers we want to achieve," Indian Association of Alberta President Roy Louis says.

Speaking to students participating in Native Adult Summer University '89, Louis said "as attitudes change, we're going to see more and more native students enrolled in postsecondary education." He said native students would begin to make inroads in the more specialized areas, such as medicine and the sciences.

A recent appointee to the University of Alberta Senate, Louis said young native people in postsecondary education, when the going gets tough during the first year, "must sit down and think about how they want to contribute.

"At times, you may be confused about your own self-identity, but you can seek help from your elders," he said. "You must have respect for your elders who know the traditions and if you play and work closely with these people, you can maintain your own traditions."

Louis emphasized that the "elite group" of native students will one day become role models and leaders for others in their respective communities. "But education is a two-way thing: if you expect us to help you, we expect you to help us." □

'Building Our Image' brochures to be distributed in September

Is the official name of our hallowed institution "The University of Alberta", or is it "University of Alberta"?

This is just one of the issues addressed by the Visual Identity Program (VIP) in its most recent brochure, "Building Our Image - A Guide to the Visual Identity Program."

The brochure discusses three primary topics: building the University's image, visual identity guidelines, and visual identity services.

By establishing guidelines and offering services to University staff, the program organizers hope it will lead to a unification of the vast range of messages and communication media and strengthen the identity of the University.

"An institution's visual identity is its ambassador to the world," the brochure states. "Built on the cornerstones of a logo and good design principles and guidelines, the consistent visual expression of an organization reflects the sum of its many achievements and goals."

The program is designed to assist those people on campus who are working on various communications projects. It is based, in part, on several approved policies and guidelines, and while many of these have become common procedure on campus, others are still in the development stage.

Copies of the brochure have been mailed to Deans, Directors and Department Chairs and will also be sent to APOs, administrative assistants and various other people on campus involved in the preparation of various types of communications projects.

Anyone wishing to obtain additional copies of the brochure should contact the Office of Public Affairs.

And by the way, General Faculties Council in 1920 decided that use of the definite article "the" would be incorrect. □

Attention Graduate Teaching Assistants

The ninth annual orientation of graduate teaching assistants (GTAs) starts 6 September and continues until at least 21 September.

CIIL (Committee for the Improvement of Teaching and Learning) has drawn up 19 topics, with the 19th—"Leading Tutorials in the Sciences, II"—scheduled for 21 September. (Five other sessions involving audiovideo tapes will be offered at the convenience of GTAs.)

This year's program includes techniques on lecture preparation and delivery, teaching in the laboratory, cultural and language considerations for foreign GTAs, time management and how to respond to the difficult student.

The orientation is free of charge, however GTAs must register for the sessions. Programs are available at 302E Students' Union Building. □

Student profile: Seymour Axler

Seymour Axler is aware of the fact that few people manage to live and thrive simultaneously in the worlds of science and music.

"It's funny," says the microbiology student, "because I have a lot of friends at school and in music, and they are completely separate. I have very few friends who are in both," says the recent winner of the Performing Rights Organization of Canada (PROCAN) Award for his original big band composition titled "Once." The piece was originally written for the U of A Stage Band.

"When I was in high school I could manage to do a lot of music all of the time and I still did very well in high school, but university is a different ball game," he says, adding that now that he's in full-time studies, there's much less time to devote to music.

"If I had enough time, I'd like to do both all year-round," he says. "But there isn't enough time to do well in school, so you have to make somewhat of a choice."

"I was in the general program and last September I decided I didn't want to get a general degree because I really didn't think it would be that useful," the 19-year-old native of Edmonton says. "I thought a specialization would be more useful."

However, even though his studies have taken proportionately more of his time in recent years, Axler's musical creativity has not been stymied.

Fellow musicians and PROCAN jurists have lauded his winning jazz composition, a piece all the more impressive considering that Axler only began writing a few years ago.

Public Affairs

His musical credentials are impeccable. The piano and trombone player has taken formal Royal Conservatory studies, attended University of Calgary jazz camps, and over the last several years has played with the U of A band and in a number of groups with members of the highly regarded Grant MacEwan Community College jazz studies program.

Although Axler is proud to have won the award, along with the $2,000 prize money, he says "it's not as if someone from Los Angeles is calling asking to have a piece commissioned." He says it's nice to win the award, but right now the impact on his life is minimal.

Nor does Axler feel pressed to choose between a career in music or in the sciences. "I really don't know what I want to do and I don't know where I'm headed," the youngest recipient of the PROCAN award says. However, with the recent affirmation that he can compete with the brightest jazz composers in the country and his placement on the Dean's Honor Roll for the 1988-89 academic year, Axler is in the enviable position of not having to decide immediately between the two pursuits—if at all, for that matter.

He has two years left in his program and isn't ruling out graduate studies. In the shorter term and with the academic term fast approaching, Axler finds himself playing music. It's the summer holidays after all, and his creative energies are focused on melodies, chord progressions and scales. The exacting world of microbiology begins anew in September. □
